By the close of business today, the November 18, 2010 document will be posted to the BDCP Web site. This represents a significant milestone. Over the course of the last four and a half years we have all constructively contributed to this draft of a comprehensive conservation plan for the Delta intending to contribute to the recovery of the Delta ecosystem and provide a reliable water supply for California.. We should all be proud of this progress. Although we still have a long way to go, today we take a major step in getting to a compilation of the plan. We could not have reached this point without the tireless dedication of so many.

Know that appreciation for all that you have done is greater than we could ever express here. And it is even greater for all that we know we will do moving forward together.
